

"Lehi experiences a lot of growth but still has the small town feel of family. The patients are comfortable with us, and we love our patients and care about them."

Although Thanksgiving Point Dental is home to Dr. Blair Losee, the first smiles you'll see are from the friendly and highly trained females who are the backbone of the Lehi practice.

The three hygienists, four dental assistants and three receptionists are busy women who balance their home lives with their excitement for the top-quality dental practice. Each of them stays up-to-date by attending more than 100 hours of continuing education annually to be able to offer the latest in implants, cosmetic dentistry, sedation dentistry and oral surgery.

In addition, Dr. Losee teaches implant dentistry and recently hosted a seminar for 24 doctors at his Lehi practice.

"We did five surgeries as other doctors watched and asked questions," says Natalie Beutler, a hygienist and one of Dr. Losee's daughters. "We are top in the state for what we do."

This kind of atmosphere translates into comfort for patients. "The women here are caring and empathetic," Dr. Losee says. "It's wonderful to see them relate to patients on a personal level or calm and comfort a fearful child."

The kind and friendly team at Thanksgiving Point Dental keeps patients coming back.

"Women have that ability to make people feel comfortable and well-cared for," says Gayle Smith, a hygienist.

The warmth during office hours continues into the evening as the staff holds Bunko nights, shops together and runs races as a group. Dental assistant Ischalyn Frei loves the inclusivity.

"We are all at different stages of life, but we still enjoy spending time together outside of work as friends," she says.

Dr. Losee employs two of his daughters and his daughter-in-law, but everyone feels like family. Bev Terry, nicknamed "Office Mom," says Dr. Losee cares deeply about his employees.

"You don't get that kind of humility from every doctor," she says.

The women of Thanksgiving Point Dental invite you to bring your smile to their high-quality practice.
